Summary

CSA Z98:24 is the ninth edition of this code. This publication outlines the minimum requirements for the design, manufacture, construction, modification, operation, inspection, and maintenance of devices within its scope.

Passenger ropeways and passenger conveyors are typically used to transport people up hills for recreational activities such as skiing, mountain biking, or ziplining.

- Passenger ropeways and passenger conveyors are primarily located in resort centers, ski resorts, aerial parks, and other remote visitor sites.

They are primarily intended for the transportation of passengers; however, they may also accommodate the transport of freight and equipment, if they are specifically engineered for that purpose and that appropriate safety measures are implemented.

The process of constructing and maintaining passenger ropeways and passenger conveyors involves various stakeholders, including owners, designers, contractors, inspectors, operators, maintenance providers, mechanics, manufacturers, among others.

- Each party holds a responsibility to ensure adherence to the Safety Codes Act, Regulations, and relevant regulations and codes.
- The equipment owner bears ultimate accountability for ensuring all requirements are fulfilled to meet compliance with legislation.
